Problems and prospects of stock market in Nepal

Pradip Kumar Mainali

Abstract

This study aims to examine the problems and prospects of stock market in Nepal. Correlation and regression analysis are used to analyse the secondary data and chi-square test is performed to analyse survey responses. Various measures of stock market development indicate that the stock market in Nepal is creeping and unable to show significant positive impact in the economy. Minimum participation of real sector and high concentration ratio, especially banking sector dominance indicate that the stock market is risky and illiquid. The findings based on primary data suggest that coordination among contributors of political stability is necessary for the sustainable development of stock market in Nepal.

Keywords: Market capitalization; liquidity; concentration; price volatility; stock market

1. Introduction

Stock market is an important institutional mechanism that plays a crucial role in the economy by channelling investment where it is needed. The activities of buying and selling securities in the stock market are extremely important for the efficient allocation of capital within economies (Adhikari (2011)). If the financial transmitting mechanism, such as stock markets, is inefficient, the flow of funds to real investment will be impeded, and the level of activities will fall below the potential (Ritter and Silber (1993)). Stock market and banks are two competing mechanisms to channel savings into investment. However, the stock markets exceed banks in allocation efficiency. It allocates the funds to investment which have potential to yield higher return. The well-functioning stock market promotes economic development by fuelling engine of growth through faster capital accumulation and tuning it through better resource allocation (Carporale, Howells, and Sdiman (2004)). An organised stock market stimulate opportunities by recognising and financing productive projects that lead to diversify risk and facilitate exchange of goods and services (Mishkin (2001)). Similarly, the importance of stock market lies in raising capital for business, mobilising saving for investment, facilitating company growth, redistribution of wealth, development of corporate governance, creating investment opportunities for small investors, raising capital for development projects, and working as barometer of the economy (<http://www.ncur.lib.nccu.edu.tw>). It is necessary to find if Nepalese stock market contains such importance.
